A MERRY HEART.

It is well to have a merry heart,
However short we stay;
There's wisdom in a merry heart,
Whatever the world may say.
Philosophy may lift its head,
And find out many a flaw,
But give me the philosophy
That's happy with a straw!

If life but brings us happiness—
It brings us, we are told,
What's hard to buy, though rich ones try,
With all their heaps of gold!
Then laugh away—let others say,
Whatever they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth!

There's beauty in a merry laugh,
A moral beauty too—
It shows the heart's an honest heart
That's paid each man his due,
And lent a share of what's to spare
Despite of widow's fears;
And made the cheek less sorrow speak,
The eye weep fewer tears.

The sun may shroud itself in cloud,
The tempest-wrath begin;
It finds a spark to cheer the dark,
Its sunlight is with n!
Then laugh away—let others say
Whatever they will of mirth;
Who laughs the most may truly boast
He's got the wealth of earth!

CHARLES SWAIN.

THE REBEL AND HIS DAUGHTER.

At the breaking out of civil disturbances in Canada, a few years since, old Dr. K., a resident of Barnton, boldly avowed his disloyalty. Wherever he went, and his professional services were constantly required in one direction or the other—he loudly denounced the government, and advocated reform. By the opposite side he was of course considered a dangerous subject; the more so, because he possessed great influence in the community. Every few days some neighbor, not so generally esteemed as the Doctor, for having hinted at the indulgence of sentiments in unison with his own, was arrested, imprisoned, and his estate great or small, confiscated; yet himself escaped being reported to the higher powers, and went on inciting the people to rebellion.

At length, however, the knowledge of his radicalism was, by some means, conveyed to the ear of authority and orders for his arrest were forthwith issued. As the Doctor was leaving the house of a patient one dark evening a person, whom in the darkness he could not distinguish; ran up to him out of breath and exclaimed:

"Ride for your life, Doctor, her Majesty's hounds are at your heels!"

The next instant the informant had leaped the wall by the roadside, and disappeared in the darkness without giving the other time to make one inquiry. He had no reason to doubt the warning was in good faith, and the manner in which he galloped away, proved his intention of turning it to good account. In a very brief space of time his fleet beast had carried him over three miles that lay between him and his home, and was raised up before the door.

Leaving his carriage and entering the house he in a few words apprized his wife and daughter of the state of affairs, and declared his resolution of fleeing to the States.

"I must be off instantly," he said, with calm energy, "for it will be too late."

"Will you go in the carriage or on horseback?" asked Miss K., a young lady of eighteen, springing from the chair, while her father's spirit of daring seemed flashing from her dark eyes.

"On horseback—on the black mare in the stable. But what are you going to do?" interrogated her father, seeing her throw on her hood, and seizing a lighted lantern.

"Saddle the black mare, to be sure," she answered, and darted out at the back door.

There was less perturbation in the household than might have been expected, for the reason that this result of the Doctor's boldness of speech had been from the first anticipated. Indeed, each of the three felt less surprised that the royal officers were now on his track, than that they had suffered him to go thus long unmolested. Scarcely had the Doctor, with the assistance of his wife, transferred his money and papers from his desk to his pockets, when the daughter, pale and trembling, rushed in, crying—

"Haste, father, fly—I hear them coming down the road!"

"I am ready," said he. Then, looking in his daughters' face he added, "but I believe I may as well meet them; they will readily frighten you into telling them all, and—"

"Never, father," returned the young lady resolutely; "I am calm now. Go—you will find the horse tied to the birch in the rear of the barn. Cross the field, and you may elude them."

Whispered 'God be with you,' were interchanged as the rebel left the house by the back passage and the door was softly closed behind him. The mother and the daughter were both pale with apprehension, and in spite of her utmost efforts, the latter's voice was slightly tremulous as she hastily resumed the reading which her father's entrance had interrupted.

There was a sound of horses hoofs, and then a rap at the door. The inmates pretended not to hear, until it was repeated, when the young lady rose and opened the door, while the mother continued sewing, with a manner as unconcerned as possible. Miss K., politely returned the salutations of the two gentlemen, whom she met, and being asked whether her father was at home, answered:

"He is not, just now, but when he went out at dark, he mentioned that he would return early. Please walk in and sit down till he comes."

The officers glanced at each other and then followed her into the house.

"Some persons who wish to see father," she observed to her mother, who looked up from her work, bowed and requested them to be seated.

They complied, but were evidently disconcerted by not finding the object of their pursuit within his own doors; for they learned at the house of his patient, three miles back, that he had left there for home but a few moments before. Significant looks were exchanged between them, and they appeared to doubt very seriously, whether their prey was not at that moment secreted about the premises.

"Do you think, madam, the Doctor will be at home soon?" inquired one of the officers of Mrs. K.

"I am unable to say with certainty," she replied, carefully raising her eyes to the clock on the mantle piece. "Half past nine," continued she; "he is usually at home earlier. He may have been called to see a new patient—I think you will do well to wait a little longer, however."

"We are anxious to consult him professionally," rejoined the officer, half-fearing that their real business was suspected.

"If it be any little matter of medicine you want, my daughter here can serve you as well as her father."

The officer was at a loss what reply to make, and the other, noticing his embarrassment, came to his aid by saying, with a sudden contortion of his countenance, and at the same time pressing his hand to his cheek—

"I want an aching tooth extracted."

"I can extract it as well as any dentist in the township," said Miss K., rising; and before the sufferer could contrive any plausible means for escaping with the teeth, the instruments for extracting were produced.

His fellow, in turn, wishing to assist him out of his dilemma, said, rather confidently,

"But I wish to be blind, Miss, and I presume you are not a surgeon."

"I assure you I am perfectly competent to serve you in that capacity," replied the young lady, without the least hesitation, "and shall be happy to apply the lancet, as soon as I have relieved this gentleman," and she pretended to examine whether the instruments were in good order.

The Queen's minions now made a virtue of necessity, and threw off the attempted disguise, which had availed them so little, and appeared in their true characters.

"We are here, madam," said the first officer, addressing Mrs. K., in a voice of stern authority. "We are here in her Majesty's name, to arrest your husband on a charge of High Treason. That he is now in the house we have no doubt; and it will be wisdom in you to give him to justice at once, otherwise, a search will be instituted immediately—he cannot escape us."

"He has already escaped you," thought the lady, but she only replied by coolly giving her word of honor that he was not in the house; "yet if you desire it," she added, "I am ready to lead you through every apartment."

The indifference with which the announcement of the object of their visit had been received, convinced Victoria's functionaries that their object had been previously understood; yet they considered it hardly possible that their intended victim could have made his escape, and began a search, with perfect confidence in its success. With each minute's delay, the ladies had gained assurance, and now, certain that husband and father was beyond the reach of his enemies, they cared little what passage the latter might choose.

A portion of the guard which had been placed about the house for the purpose of thwarting any attempt at escape on the rebel, was ordered to explore the outbuildings, while the two in command themselves searched the dwelling.

The discovery of the Doctor's carriage, and horse still panting with fast driving, under a shed, which, removed from the other out-houses was, as Miss K. had anticipated when she placed them there, the last to be searched, inspired the men with fresh ardor; but they were finally obliged to confess their journey bootless, and return as empty as they came.

Meanwhile, the old rebel, as he was called by the defenders of the Crown, was far on his way to the States, where he was soon joined by his family. A reward was offered for him, dead or alive, but in vain. He is still free to do out the contents of his saddle-bags to the relief of suffering humanity.
